Short Bio

Julius Lobe is an International Law Fellow at IntLaw LLP. He is a fourth-year law student at the University of London and is concurrently studying Governance and Public Policy in Germany. Julius's academic interests center on public international law, investment and commercial arbitration, international human rights law, and international economic law.

Julius's background includes leadership roles in academic and policy-focused activities. He has contributed to the work of the Constitution Society, where he published an article examining questions of devolution and centralization in the United Kingdom. He has also been active in the European Law Students' Association (ELSA), where, in his capacity as Director for Seminars and Conferences, he organized an international conference on sustainability and environmental law. In addition, Julius has gained practical legal experience by participating in a Start-Up Law Clinic, where he advised founders on intellectual property and commercial matters.

At IntLaw LLP, Julius works across the firm's international law matters. His work includes contributing to legal research and memoranda, supporting international proceedings, and assisting with the preparation of materials for clients and capacity-building initiatives. He also contributes to the organization of IntLaw LLP's events and supports the firm's broader international activities.
